It seems such a long time ago that my 22 year old daughter, Jennifer said to me one day. "Dad, I want to live in New York". Wow! We had been coming to America since 1987 and Jennifer had two pen friends in NY which she had visited. I made some enquiries but it looked impossible until quite by chance I saw a small ad in The Sunday Times from Richard Robinson, the UK arm of American Life about a visa called a EB5. After a bit of research we knew that this would be the way forward and after a meeting with him in London my wife, Wendy, Jennifer and I flew to Seattle to meet the USA arm of the company. We were met with enthusiastic, knowledgeable associates who showed us around the area and explained in fine detail the workings of the scheme and the options available. We were convinced and Jennifer entered the labyrinth of the US immigration system firmly holding the hand of American life and its associate lawyers. We were given an timetable of stages usually taken by the US authorities to process the various parts of the visa and almost to the week these processes were complete and we moved onto the next stage.

During this time Jennifer enjoyed a rental income from our chosen property and we even subscribed to the web site of one of the tenants of the building that she had a fractural ownership of. At all times we were told what was happening and guided through the process.

In 2008 Jennifer, was given her precious EB5 visa which allows her permanent residence in the USA with freedom to live and work where she likes. Thank you American Life. You have made a young girls dream come true and although we are sad to have lost her to America she is living her dream. As the advert for paint says in the UK. You have done exactly what it says on the tin.
